Not illustrated. 1808 Excerpt: ...from my house, in a lot firmly covered with grass, about twenty-five rods from the house of Elijah Seeley. The breach here made in the ground was about four feet diameter, and nearly the same depth, in a rather sloping direction, which was occasioned by the stone striking a shelly rock, and glancing. The rock on which the stone fell was much shattered, and the stone itself very much broken, the largest pieces weighing not more than six or eight pounds; the quantity altogether about a bushel. A quart or two of these fragments we gathered here; the greater part having been previously carried away by the inhabitants. By the fall and glancing of the stone, the dirt and sod were strewed two or three rods round the breach, and several pieces of sod carried before the fragments to the lowest depth to which they sunk in the earth, and were removed by myself. Mr. Seeley and his wife say, that just after day-light they saw vivid flashes of light in rapid succession, for five or six seconds and in about a minute afterwards it was followed by a dreadful explosion, resembling somewhat three cannon fired in quick succession, ending in a cracking, rumbling noise; that about ten o'clock the same morning, going into this lot, just back of his house, to see after his cattle, he discovered the breach in the ground above described, and, conceiving it to have been caused by something discharged from above, at the time he heard the explosion, he called his wife out to witness the facts; and in the course of the day it was visited by all the neighbourhood. Mr. Seeley and his wife are sober, discreet, and intelligent persons, implicitly to be relied on. The next place we went to view was about four miles
