Anthericum ferotinum, being found only on the roof inaccessible alpine rocks of North Wales, has been seen by very few British botanists. Our specimen was communicated in a fresh state by J. W.
Griffith, Esq. of Gam, a gentleman to whom we are indebted for many valuable particulars concerning the botany of his own sequestered and romantic country, and who finds this plant in plenty on the rocks above the alpine valley of Cwm I dwel, Carnarvonshire, flowering in June or early in July, so that the name ferotinum seems not very happily applied. The root is perennial, consisting of a slender oblong curved bulb, with many fibres at its base.
Stem from 3 to 6 inches high, foliary, erect, round, smooth, leafy, generally simple and single-flowered, as Linnaeus defines it; but Mr. Griffith has not unfrequently observed it branched and bearing many flowers.
Radical leaves slender, femicylindrical or angular, surmounting the stem; the rest alternate, short, dilated at their base. Flower terminal, erect, compared by Dr.
Richardson, to that of Wood Sorrel (r. 762), which it at first sight somewhat resembles, the petals being white, externally veined with purplish red. Stamina thread-shaped, smooth. (Typographical errors above are
